PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION:

This house (now a golf club clubhouse) is an example of a large Federal Revival-style house c. 1920. It includes the core plus several additions. The core is a five bay, two and a half story house with a hipped, wood shingled roof. The walls are coursed stone. Two interior end chimneys are located at each end of the building, puncturing the roof. Three roof dormers crowned with segmental arched roofs appear on the façade. Large dentil molding adorns the molded cornice under the roof with wood shingles. There are five windows on the second floor, each with paneled shutters and a lintel broken by a keystone. The façade is dominated by a porte cochere with a hipped roof. There have been several additions to the building. A large one story dining room connects to the core by way of a two and a half story stone addition on the east end. The 2½ story addition has smaller dormers than the core and an end chimney.

Associated resources:

(1) Garage: This one story garage has stone walls and a large hipped roof with wood shingles. The doors are vertical rather than horizontal and are paneled.

(2) Pro Shop Complex of frame structures

Classification: This large stone house has seen many significant alterations and is a Class II resource.
