Union Meeting Church

The Union Meeting Church is located on Union Meeting Road below Hoover Road in Blue Bell. The deed conveying the land containing one hundred and twenty-one perches was given on September 4, 1813, by James and Elizabeth Buck to the trustees of the Bethel Methodist Episcopal Church.

The next year a stone meeting house was built. The date-stone says "Union Meeting House," built 1814. The pastors of the Bethel Methodist Episcopal Church preached here every two weeks. However, the intent of having a Union Meeting House was to accommodate ministers of all the Christian denominations when not in use by the Methodists.

During the excitement and at the time the division among the Friends took place, Edward Hicks frequently preached within its walls.

The building was remodeled in 1882 under the direction of the Reverend G. S. Schaffer. The cost was a thousand dollars and the church then had a seating capacity for two hundred and fifty people.

For quite a period during its earlier history, it was a flourishing society but later its membership was seriously decimated by deaths, removals, and other causes. The entire membership by 1884 did not exceed twelve people. Shortly thereafter the remaining congregation joined the Bethel Church in Worcester.

The graveyard is behind the church and the names most common on the tombstones are those of Zimmerman, Supplee, Brown, Smith, Fitzgerald, Shaeff, Kibblehouse, Roberts and Beck.

This church remained vacant for many years, the only activity being a World War I military burial in 1918 of a man from Norristown. The cemetery deteriorated and was densely overgrown. The church was desecrated and vandalized to the point that it would have met the same fate as the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church, if it were not for the appointment of five trustees who were called upon to save the structure. Of these five only two are remaining, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Walter Shaeff, Jr.

In 1947, the church was rented to the Community Orthodox Presbyterian Church. Extensive work was done to restore the building to useable condition and the cemetery to its former appearance. It is now a building that is an asset to the community.
