The house and chimney are stuccoed, and the roof is covered with wood shingles. The windows are double sash and have shutters. Two gabled roof dormers adorn the front façade, and a one-story porch with a shed roof shades one side of the façade. The additions are two stories tall and sit on a perpendicular axis to the core. The first addition had an end chimney, which became an interior chimney when a later addition was added. Another two-story addition sitting parallel to the house has an end chimney and has a one story addition.

Classification: There have been many changes to this house, including the removal of the front door and replacement stucco. These changes make the house a Class II resource.

HISTORICAL NARRATIVE

“Febas Farm”

By Dorothy S. Conard

On a four acre site, at 1301 Butler Pike in Broad Axe, that now belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stratton, there once stood a log cabin that belonged to an early settler in Whitpain Township. It was part of a larger farm of about twenty-one acres. There are deeds dated 1781 that show that two parcels of land with two messuages or tenements were transferred to Samuel and Elizabeth Hallowell by John Hallowell and his wife and Jonathan Davis and his wife. One piece of land was seven acres; the other, fourteen acres. In 1796 Samuel and Elizabeth Hallowell sold these properties and twenty-one acres of land to Aquilla Tool.

In 1798, Aquilla Tool sold a little more than four acres to David and Catherine Trexler. David Trexler probably built the present home, as he was married and raising a family. William Greacy bought the property from David Trexler in 1802 and in 1820 William Greacy sold to Baltis Hoffman. Rachael Welsh was the next owner in 1845 and after that the house came down in the same family through inheritance and purchase. John and Mary Dutill occupied the home and later the property was owned and tenanted by Harry Moyer. In 1945, Fred and Edna Stratton bought the property from Harry Moyer, an uncle of Fred Stratton, and it still remains “a little more than four acres” of land.

The present stone house, when it was first built, according to Mrs. Stratton, was one room downstairs, two rooms upstairs and two rooms on the third floor. The dining room and room above were built later, partly on the spot of the log cabin that had been torn down.

Outside the dining-room window is a very large ancient boxwood where remains of a log cabin have been found. It is believed the boxwood was planted at the window of the log cabin. The present owners were offered $500 for the boxwood in 1945. Mrs. Stratton has found many pieces of old pottery and china and said that when they cultivate, they “always dig up something.”

The white oak tree between the house and barn is 300 years old and is sixteen feet in girth and is registered in State records.

The dry wall at one end of the swimming pool is built from stones from two homes that were demolished at the North corner of Butler and Skippack Pikes.

This home has been in the Stratton family for four generations. Mr. Stratton related that one of the stories handed down through the family is that in Revolutionary days milk from the farm was taken to Broad Axe to serve the soldiers of the Continental Army.

This home has been in the Stratton family for four generations. Mr. Stratton related that one of the stories handed down through the family is that in Revolutionary days milk from the farm was taken to Broad Axe to serve the soldiers of the Continental Army.

Mr. and Mrs. Stratton have in their possession a copy of an Indenture of Apprenticeship dated February, 1803 whereby John Dutill, by and with the consent of his father, John Dutill, Sr., put himself apprentice to David Eastburn for a term of fifteen years and one month: . . . during all which Term, the said Apprentice his said Master faithfully shall serve, his Secrets keep, his lawfull Commands every where readily obey. He shall do no Damage to his said Master, nor see it to be done by others, without letting or giving Notice thereof to his said Master. He shall not waste his said Master's Goods, nor lend them unlawfully to any. He shall not commit Fornication, nor contract Matrimony within the said Term. He shall not play at Cards, Dice, or any other unlawful Game, whereby his said Master may have Damage, with his own Goods, nor the Goods of others, without License from his said Master, he shall neither buy nor sell. He shall not absent himself Day nor Night from his said Master's Service without his Leave: Nor haunt Ale-houses, Taverns, or Play-houses; but in all Things behave himself as a faithful Apprentice ought to do, during the said Term. And the said Master shall use the utmost of his Endeavour to teach or cause to be taught or instructed the said Apprentice in the Trade or Mastery of a Farmer . . . and procure and provide for him sufficient Meat, Drink, Appar-el, . . . Lodging and Washing, fitting for an Apprentice, during said Term of fifteen years and one month . . . and shall and will in the course of the said Term teach or cause to be taught the said Apprentice to Read distinctly write a legible hand and cypher through the Rule of three and at the expiration thereof shall and will give unto him One good new Suit of Apparel over and besides his common every day Clothing. . . . "

For some reason, John Dutill did not remain as apprentice to David Eastburn the full term of fifteen years and one month, since in October 1809, David Eastburn assigned over "Right Title Interest or Claim to A Certain Servant Boy Named John Dutill" to Joseph Phipps ". . . for the consideration of twelvedollars . . . ."

The Indenture of Apprenticeship was cancelled in March, 1818 after the fifteen years and one month had expired.
